CLOSET COMPASS GIVES HOPE AND PROFITS TO CRAMPED CLOSETS

New York, NY - April 23, 2008 - Closet Compass helps New Yorkers solve their space issues while actually making them a buck. It is not a custom closet company who will install shelving or a personal shopping service that leaves you with a pile of unwanted clothes but rather, it is a service that helps you reduce, restructure and resell the garments you already have. Unlike closet cleaning services out there, Closet Compass's wardrobe managers make house calls and eliminates the remnants after a full service wardrobe assessment and edit. On top of that, the even bigger difference is that our managers make the closet cleaning experience a profitable one!

Closet Compass not only leaves its customers with a newly organized wardrobe, it will remove their unwanted items and recover some of their costs by serving as their consignment shop. Consignment sales are fulfilled through a global online platform paid for solely on commission when a sale is made.

Jesse Kornbluth, head editor at HeadButler.com, bought a couture dress for his wife that didn't fit her and had been holding on to it for years. He writes,

“What do you do with a vintage Lanvin evening dress you bought on a whim at auction years ago, never wore and now want to sell? My wife found Closet Compass. And Closet Compass didn't flinch.

Our visit by Julie Katon was brief and enjoyable. Paperwork was exchanged. The dress disappeared. The next thing we knew, there was a page of pictures of the dress that made it look worthy of Bergdorf's window. The next event: the e-mail alerting us to the sale, and at the price we wanted. And the final event: the check.

The whole transaction was blissfully stress-free. I just wish we had a closet of couture to sell.”

Closet Compass serves all the wardrobe needs of their clients from consignment to total closet makeovers. The ultimate goal and customer benefit of working with a Closet Compass wardrobe manager is recouping money from a wardrobe edit session. New Yorkers no longer need to feel like their tiny closets are getting in their way when they can contact Closet Compass to give their wardrobe a clear direction.

Closet Compass is a privately owned business servicing the New York Metro area started by Julie Katon. With a design education from the Fashion Institute of Design and Merchandising, interior design and online consignment experience, Julie was able to identify a niche service business that New Yorkers can truly benefit from.
